Field of the Invention The present invention relates to the art of manufacturing batteries and more particularly to the art of manufacturing batteries of the type having an active material coated on a current collector. 2. Description of the Prior Art Polymeric electrolyte secondary batteries, which are ordinarily also referred to as lithium ion secondary batteries, are well-known in the art and they are generally used for a wide variety of applications. In recent years, many applications have been developed which have led to higher demands for more compact, light-weight, and higher performance batteries. For example, a higher energy density is required for portable power sources for electronic equipment and for other applications. In order to satisfy such a requirement, a lithium ion secondary battery may be configured as a so-called "jelly-roll" type in which a positive electrode with a positive electrode mixture, a negative electrode with a negative electrode mixture, and a separator interposed therebetween are stacked and rolled up around a core. It is noted that the core may be positioned in the center, and/or at either end of the roll. In such a configuration, the positive electrode and the negative electrode may each be wound to cover only one side of the core, thereby realizing a construction that is referred to as a so-called "edge-wound" type. Alternatively, all of the positive electrode, the negative electrode, and the separator may be wound to cover the entire peripheral surface of the core, thereby realizing a construction that is referred to as a so-called "center-wound" type. When the positive electrode and the negative electrode are wound around the core of the battery roll, it is necessary to space the positive electrode and the negative electrode from each other to prevent short circuiting therebetween. Therefore, the thickness of the winding layer is made to be smaller than the diameter of the core and the resulting thickness profile of the battery is determined by the core diameter, the number of layers of the winding, and the thickness of the winding. Specifically, the battery roll may be constructed from f678ea9f9e
